On the 18th past, at Midnight, a dreadful Fire happened at Galata, which consumed Two Thousand Five Hundred Houses and Shops It broke out near the Gate of Tophana, and a very high Northerly Wind spread the Flames with rapid Vehemency; so that the Fire raged for Fifteen Hours. The miserable Inhabitants were chiefly Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, and suffered much from the Cold, which was so intense, that a continual Snow fell to the Ground, frozen like Hail; some Children and sick People are said to have lost their Lives by it; but we do not hear that any perished in the Flames. Two other Fires began the same Night at Constantinople; the one laid Twelve Houses in Ashes; the other Three, before it could be extinguished. It is said to be discovered, that all the Three Fires were caused by Incendiaries, and that an Attempt was made the same Night to set Fire to the Quarter of the Greeks at Fanal in Constantinople.
